

I travel to many cities in the southern US for business and rely very much on traffic and weather information primarily because it gives me a chance to stop before getting to accidents and heavy weather to look in my atlas for another route. By the time I can receive the information on a local station due to excessive advertising, it is usually too late to stop and look for alternative routes. I pay a premium for this service. It is not free therefore I feel it is my right to receive the services for which I am paying.